On Audience With Eastlan's Gould

Three weeks ago, YouTube changed how it counts a view from 30 seconds to the moment playback starts ... which will be the public number and, ostensibly, how advertisers are charged. Creators will continue to be credited on the higher threshold. In the radio space, the historic dominance of Nielsen is being challenged, not least of which is Eastlan's move into major markets. CEO Mike Gould recently spoke with Country Aircheck about the ever-shifting sands of audience measurement.

CA: Does this moment feel pivotal to you?

MG: We may be on the precipice of change.

Television was Nielsen-only for a long time and now Comscore and others are involved. Radio might be at that same spot, whether it's the DTS measurement, Eastlan or Nielsen. We're moving into a bold new frontier.

Can you offer a thumbnail of your methodology?

When we started 27 years ago, it was all telephone recall. Reaching people on the phone morphed into some combination of telephone and cellular. About 15 years ago, we began to include a digital diary online interview using large panel companies. Over the course of time, as you might imagine, the balance of landline telephone calls to cellular numbers to online completion has evolved. We're now well over 90% online. The methodology remains hybrid, but just to a small degree. For the most part, it's people who participate through the large panel companies like SynthSurvey, Dynata and Rep Data.

How do those companies determine the market samples?

We put that together, balanced by age, race, gender and Zip Code. We present that matrix of needs and they proceed to fill that. We know that in Houston we need X 18 to 34 year olds and of that X, a certain percent need to be black and, of that, a certain percent need to be a certain Zip Code. They then go on the hunting expedition to deliver that. It works pretty well. No individual interview has significantly more value than many others.

In Nielsen, for example, it's not uncommon to see a demo like 18 to 24 year olds have an index of 16 because they've under-sampled. Ours is usually between 95 and 105 depending on each different age cell. By using the digital means, we're able to get a more balanced sample than what radio's had for a long time.

NaSHoF: Lee Thomas Miller

Raised in Kentucky, Lee Thomas Miller moved to Nashville in 1991 with a degree in Music Theory & Composition from Eastern Kentucky University. Cuts with Ken Mellons and Mindy McCready preceded his first No. 1, Joe Nichols' "The Impossible." Notable compositions since include Terri Clark's "I Just Wanna Be Mad," Brad Paisley's "The World," Trace Adkins' "You're Gonna Miss This," Jamey Johnson's "In Color," Tim McGraw's "Southern Girl," Chris Stapleton's "Whiskey And You," Brothers Osborne's "It Ain't My Fault" and Scotty McCreery's "It Matters To Her." In his own words:

If you get an opportunity, Nashville puts you where you're meant to be. Jeff Carlton, who was at Hamstein Music in the '90s, said, "I don't think you're an artist, but I think you could write songs." I tell people that and they cringe: "That's so harsh." But at that point, I'd spent a few years with somebody cutting sides on me trying to get a record deal. I was in over my head and waiting for somebody to nudge me one way or the other. So Jeff saying, "If you'll quit doing everything else and just write songs, I'll give you a publishing deal" ... I said yes. "Well, you can go home and think about it." No, no, no. Yes! I'm now a songwriter. That was 1996, and I've been a signed professional writer every day since.

Every day was pretending I know what I'm doing. Once I had opportunities to write with people who were big-league, I started thinking, what do they need from me? Well, they don't need my melodies. They're monster musicians. The people on the radio in those days – Joe Diffie, Trisha Yearwood – were world-class singers, so they don't need my singing. And those writers certainly didn't need me to teach them how to write the second verse. Early on I realized, oh, you're out of ideas. You need ideas. So when I got in a room with someone who was really doing it, I would've narrowed my 10,000 ideas down to 200. How about this? They'd say, "I've already written that." How about this? "Don't like that." How about this? I remember a very successful writer looking at me and saying, "You could do this all day." And I said, "I could do this all day." That was the first time somebody said, "You're going to be okay at this. That's really good. You're really prepared."

The song sat for two years after I wrote "The Impossible" with Kelly Lovelace. Nobody cared. I have pitched seven songs in 35 years because I hate rejection. I'm the guy who knew 400% my wife would say yes or I never would have asked her out. But I played it for Sam Ramage, who was A&R at RCA. He played it for everybody on the label, then called me back and said, "I love it, but everybody has passed." Then I got a call about Joe Nichols, who already lost an independent deal and didn't have a new deal, but Tim DuBois might be opening another label and, if he does, he may sign Joe. If he signs Joe, they want studio guitarist Brent Rowan to produce, though he's never produced before. And if all that happens, you've got the first single.

So it's a guy that's never produced a record on a kid that does not have a record deal on a label that does not exist. That's the call I got. Then I got a call before any of that happened that Mark Chesnutt cut it, but my publisher had promised it to DuBois so they were pulling it back. I was like, "For what? The guy who doesn't have a record deal?" I didn't know how any of that worked, but I told her that was a terrible idea. But there you go. Joe got it, it was my first No. 1 and first Grammy nomination. It changed everything.

You've been adding markets over the last year or two, including bigger markets. How has your market count changed?

It's probably between 18 and 20 new markets in the past year. A generalization would be that they're larger, although some of the markets we added have been small. New for us are places like Atlanta, Chicago, Seattle, Raleigh, Dallas, Denver and Houston – PPM markets, which until four years ago was someplace we hadn't been. At the same time, there are smaller markets falling off the other end. Maybe 25 years ago they

OFF THE RECORD

"Singer/songwriter Skip Ewing shares the stories behind songs on his new album, Dragonfly."

1. "Me & God And A Fishing Pole:"

A fly rod on the river, a cork in a pond, horseback riding deep in the Wyoming wilderness, laying on my back to watch the stars, to contemplate the vastness of the universe ... these are all moments that bring me closer to God. They remind me how fragile and fleeting our physical journey is as a spiritual being. Fishing may be the reason we choose to go, but communion with nature is the real gift, whether we catch fish or not. Life is still an unfathomable mystery to me, one for which I have great reverence. "And I don't think I'm the only one ..."

SKIP EWING

2. "Not Me This Time:" Alcohol and a telephone can be a cruel combination. When boundaries are achingly painful to maintain, it often means they're built out of love. Sometimes the most loving thing to say is "never again."

3. "Play On:" Tenacity, perseverance, self-efficacy, self-discovery, vision, hard work and skin like a rhinoceros — for a creative spirit in the music business, these qualities are more important than the talent we need to cultivate. Before you experience any significant success you'll experience incredible negativity, egos and obstacles meant to dissuade you. After you experience significant success, it will become even more difficult to discern who your friends are, and who is there to capitalize on the very success they endeavored to deny you. If knowing that, the flame to succeed still burns in you: play on! Defy the odds! Just know ... the devil never went down to Georgia.

4. "Whiskey And You:" If alcohol hadn't touched so many of our lives, we wouldn't write country songs about it. And if there weren't so many breakups and divorces, we wouldn't write songs about them either. Tragically, sometimes there's no cure for any of it ... but it makes a hell of a song.

5. "Stronger Where You're Broken" (feat. Mae Estes):

This song speaks to the power of past hurt in a present relationship. It was clear from the start that it could be even more powerful featuring a female artist. Mae Estes was definitely the right choice! Her voice and heart are both beautiful."

we're Nielsen markets and we've had a 10- or 15-year run with them. Now even our product is priced out in markets like Wenatchee, WA. A market of 80,000 people just doesn't make any sense anymore. We're growing the average market size ... the increments have been more dramatic in the last couple years.

What are the factors behind being in those bigger markets and making it work? Is the Cumulus split with Nielsen a big factor?

Cumulus isn't the reason, but it's one of the examples. That's a difficult question for the sales guy to answer [because] I'm going to tell you this is about tremendous quality, we are super handsome and the nicest people in the world. The reality has always been about economic factors. Twenty years ago, if a broadcaster in market 150 could change a vendor relationship and save $75,000, it might not have been worth messing with the gold standard [of Nielsen]. In today's world, when you don't own a tower or have a midday show anymore, and when you don't have your traffic done in the United States anymore ... and the number is now $125,000 or even in the millions ... you have to look at it. That's what's happening.

Unfortunately, it's not because rising tides are lifting all boats. It's perhaps symptomatic of where our industry is. We're just having to look closely at every vendor relationship. Broadcasters are deciding the return on investment is not there.

I saw the press release where you guys thanked Nielsen for adopting digital diaries, and I'm not sure how tongue-in-cheek that was or wasn't, but is your view of them more competitive or complementary?

It's their world and we're lucky to be in it. From that standpoint, they really are Goliath and we're David. For a broadcaster, I don't think it ever comes down to which rating system is better, righter, more correct. It really is a value judgment they make, and it's usually based on money. We continue to see ourselves as an alternative to them. To the heart of your question, was that cynical? No, I think they're going to find what we did, that completing interviews in the digital world as opposed to the telephone or, in their case sending out diaries, is less expensive.

That's allowed us to lower our prices or keep our prices the same over time. Recognizing that we're in a digital world, we can sign a five-year agreement with a customer and guarantee no price increase. Nielsen should be able to do the same thing, which will save broadcasters money at a time when they need things to be more efficient.

This really only relates to diary markets. In an oversimplification, they are recruiting people by letter or some sort of invitation to complete a diary. Then that person has to remember to complete it and send it back. It's a multi-stage process. The width of the funnel is quite a bit narrower than what they're going to find for people who are willing to complete a much more convenient digital diary.

I have a 35-year-old son who moved into a new house two months ago. I asked him, "Do you have a pencil in here?" He said, "I might have a pen. Let me look." Found a pen, no pad of paper. The idea that someone would carry around a little booklet and write in it with a black pen or a pencil – that's a pretty narrow group of people. Especially when you look at people who are 18 to 34 years old. Getting into online will allow [Nielsen] to be more cost efficient and the sampling will be easier for them.

Gould discusses DTS Autostage, radio advertising's strengths and more, next week in part two.

CHECK OUT

SEPTEMBER 18Luke Bryan Signs (MCA)

Bryan's ninth studio album features 11 songs, including single "Country And She Knows It," written by Josh Miller, Parker Welling and Matt Dragstrem.

Riley Green That's Just Me (Nashville Harbor)

"This record came together during a pretty big season of life for me," Green says of the 19-track project he produced alongside Dann Huff. "I was out on the road on the biggest tour I've ever had, writing and recording while a lot was changing at the same time. There are songs on here that are more emotional, some that are made for having a good time with your buddies, and others that come from real moments I was living through."

Drew Baldridge Farm Faith Family (Lyric Ridge/BMG/Stoney Creek)

Baldridge co-wrote 14 of the 16 tracks on the album, which features duets with Anne Wilson and Emily Ann Roberts. The project also includes contributions from songwriters including Luke Combs, Laura Veltz, Tyler Hubbard, Seth Mosley, Rhett Akins and Tim Nichols. In celebration of his major-label debut, Baldridge has offered fans opportunities to have him perform on their farms and in their churches.

Laci Kaye Booth Love Ain't For The Faint Of Heart (Lost Highway)

Booth's third album — and first for Lost Highway — was produced by Ben West and features tracks including "Luck Of The Draw," "Daddy's Mugshot" and latest single "Ethereal Redneck Shit."

Ty Myers Two Braids & The Truth-My Tribute To Willie (Records Nashville/Columbia)

"This album is a collection of Willie Nelson songs that have made an impact in my songwriting, love for music and embodies what it means to be a Texan," Myers says. "Willie's songs have played a huge role in every phase, of not just my music but my life, and I hope this album does him justice. I am honored to have made an album to tribute a true Texas icon and will hold these songs close to my heart forever."

Orville Peck Mule (Warner Records)

Songs on Peck's fourth LP include "Prologue (Eulogy Of A Man Turned Mule)," which features Emmylou Harris, Noah Cyrus and Allison Russell, and lead single "Too Little, Too Late," produced by Jay Joyce and written by Peck with Dan Wilson and Steve Rusch.

Cassidy Daniels What Have I Got To Lose (101 Music/Thirty Tigers)Four songs from the 10-track, John Osborne-produced collection were featured on the Paramount+ series Dutton Ranch: "Heart Shaped Necklace," "Crazy Love," "When It Rains" and "Ain't No Jukebox."Skip Ewing Dragonfly (—)

Inspired by his 1:1 work with horses in Wyoming, all but one of the 10 tracks (a cover of Creedence Clearwater Revival's "Down On The Corner") were self-penned.
